This condition is characterized by the formation of one or more pockets or pouches in the wall of the intestine. The pouch is referred to as a diverticulum. These sacs can form anywhere along the digestive system, but the large intestine is more prone. When the pouch gets inflamed, the condition is referred to as diverticulitis. There are quite a number of theories about the cause of diverticular disease. It is thought that straining throughout defecation can cause the formation of such pouches. If these pouches get blocked with waste, bacteria may multiply in the sacs, therefore triggering an infection. If the narrow opening of a diverticulum gets blocked, it could limit the blood supply, thereby leading to inflammation.
